

MILNE FAMILY IS BELIEVED TO BE PLANNING RANSOM

Officials Will Not Admit
Rendezvous In Upper
New York State

SECOND NOTE REPORTED

Considerable Activity at Home
Of Aunt of Kidnapped
Youth

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—(INS)—Far from the Christmas season excitement of New York City, deep in the quiet woodland of upper New York State, representatives of a harrassed family today were believed bargaining with kidnapers for the life of Caleb J. Milne, 4th, 22.

Negotiations for the return of the youth, it is said, are being conducted near the cozy cottage of the victim's aunt in Woodstock, N. Y.

Neither Federal G-Men nor New York police would admit that a rendezvous between members of Milne's family and the abductors had been agreed upon, but there were numerous indications that a break in the case was near.

Meanwhile a second ransom note was reported received by Caleb's grandfather in Germantown, Pa., directing that $50,000 be forwarded to the victim's younger brother, Frederic, in New York, in denominations of $10, $20 and $50.

Accompanying the note was a clipping from an Albany newspaper describing young Milne's disappearance. It was stained with blood.

At the Milne home in Thirty-seventh street last night all was quiet. Frederic Milne and his mother apparently remained there until morning. Shortly before midnight, Frederic and a G-Man went out for a brief walk, purchased a newspaper and returned. They were not seen to leave the house again.

At the home of Miss Anita Smith, Milne's aunt in Woodstock, however, there was considerable activity and an air of tenseness. From top to bottom, the two-story cottage was a blaze of lights. All night long automobiles laden with federal men and members of the Scotland Yard division of the State Police crept through dark highways and byways in the vicinity of the cottage. In the cars of the federal men were machine and minor guns, the latter capable of piercing thick plates of armor.

On the east bank of the Hudson, opposite Woodstock, a G-Man was stationed in every village and hamlet, Poughkeepsie, from where the first ransom note was mailed, was a beehive of activity.

The latest note received by the missing youth's grandfather read: "One more false move and your name will be finish. Do as the letter says. If you fail, you will find him dead."

Send $50,000, in denominations of $10, $20 and $50. Take them to New York. Grandson awaiting orders."

Like a previous note received by Frederic Milne, this communication was composed of words clipped from newspapers and pasted on a sheet of paper.

Accompanying this was a package containing the abducted youth's watch and a bloodstained clipping from the Albany paper. This clipping, along with the ransom note and the watch, was rushed by special airplane to Washington, where they will be placed under a laboratory microscope in the Department of Justice headquarters. The letter bore no signature. The package had a return address, giving the initials H. L., an illegible house number and the legend "Fifth Avenue, New York." It was addressed with a rubber stamp.

NATIONAL SECURITY

"I cannot too strongly urge . . . the duty of restoring our Navy as rapidly as possible to the high state of efficiency which formerly characterized it. . . . It is plain that the policy of strengthening this arm of the service is dictated by consideration of wise economy, of just regard for our future tranquility, and of true appreciation of the dignity and honor of the Republic."

HAUPTMANN LAWYERS TO REQUEST 'LIE DETECTOR'

Important Step Is To Secure
Condemned's Signature for Hearing Application

TO PAY HIM A VISIT

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—Two important steps were being taken today by Bruno Richard Hauptmann's lawyers in their last fight to save the slayer of the Lindbergh baby from the electric chair. First they will visit him in his death house cell in Trenton to get his signature on the formal application for his hearing of the case by the New Jersey Court of Pardons.

Then they will make a formal request that the Bronx carpenter be given a "lie detector" test to aid the Court of Pardons. The request for the lie detector was made by Hauptmann himself in a letter to Governor Hoffman of New Jersey, it was made public today.

The prisoner said he hoped this inspired Dr. John Condon (falsie of the ransom negotiations) to do the same.

FLOOD TIDE OF IMPORTS

(New York American, December 17, 1935)

The American people are paying a heavy toll for the lack of administrative skill and practical judgment of the little men in big jobs in the Roosevelt Administration.

This incompetence is nowhere better illustrated than by the flood of agricultural imports at a time when the Roosevelt Administration is penalizing American consumers to pay benefits to farmers.

If equality of agriculture is to be the goal, then it is essential to start out by giving the American farmer, who has been shut out of numerous foreign markets, a monopoly of the domestic market.

The recent high imports are no mere unplanned consequence of the drought.

They constitute an expression of deliberate policy. This is demonstrated by the recent Canadian so-called reciprocal agreement, which will encourage further importation of food-stuffs.

A recent issue of "Foreign Crops and Markets," published by the United States Department of Agriculture, indicates that the increase in competitive agricultural imports has reached fantastic levels.

The imports of butter for the year ended June 30, 1935, were 45.5 per cent over the 1925 to 1934 average; of tallow, 2,920 per cent increase; of barley, 12,970 per cent increase; and so on.

The agricultural import situation is typical of the effects of lack of practical administrative generalship, which should give unity to the varied activities of the Government.

The New Dealers have been contemptuous of the business man, yet the country sorely needs in Government men of the sound judgment which is common among successful business executives.

The popular demand for uncommon common sense in public life accounts for the extraordinary public interest in the personality of Governor Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, who typifies American astuteness and integrity.

School

OTHER NEWS ITEMS

MORRISVILLE, Dec. 17.—Vandals did considerable damage to the new concrete work which is being done around the high school here. Large holes were dug in two blocks of new concrete sidewalk and the damage is so bad that the slabs will have to be taken out and entirely rebuilt, as it will not be possible to repair them. The vandals also stole all the brass fittings on a concrete mixer used on the work. Local police are making an investigation. The school board is considering offering a reward for the apprehension of the guilty party. The school authorities say it looks like a spite job and not the work of children.

Officials of the Bucks County Firemen's Association, including President James Groome of Yardley, and Fire Marshal William L. Stackhouse of Hulmeville, together with members of Morrisville Borough Council will be guests of the Union Fire Company at the annual banquet to be held New Year's Eve, Tuesday, December 31, at eight p. m. The dinner will be served by members of the Ladies Auxiliary. The committee is composed of Elmer Wiley, Joseph Rech, Walter Cutler, Robert Chase, John Adams and Howard Gould.

The annual meeting of the Union Company will be held Monday night, December 23, when the election of officers will be held. At this election a chief of the department will be elected. Union and Capitol View companies alternate on the chief each year and 1936 is the year for Union to have this post.

Jack Sweeney, of Florence, a former pitcher for the Morrisville baseball club in the pre-war days, addressed the Morrisville Rotary at its dinner-meeting at the Lincoln Restaurant. He spoke on Safety but he also related some of the incidents of the "old days" when he played baseball here. Orty Justice, another "old-timer" who caught when Sweeney pitched, was a guest at the meeting. Neal Nolan, a member of Rotary, was manager of the baseball team when Sweeney pitched and Justice caught. The Morrisville Rotary Club will hold a Christmas party next Thursday night when gifts will be distributed to the members.

DOYLESTOWN SCOUTS VICTORS BY ONE POINT

Win First Aid Tournament
From Quakertown
Troop No. 2

LAST OF SUCH TESTS

QUAKERTOWN, Dec. 17.—One point "saved the day" for Doylestown No. 2 on Saturday at the Bucks County Scouting Council First Aid Tournament in the Quakertown High School gymnasium. The county seat team "nosed out" Quakertown No. 2 by a score of 887 to 886 points out of a possible 1000. Scoutmaster Hillborn Darlington, Jr., and Chairman of the Troop Committee Robert Dippy, Sr., were energetic in their effort to repeat their 1934 victory, and Quakertown No. 2 trained by Scoutmaster O. Kenneth Fretz, and Dr. Raymond Tide were as thorough in training their team from the northern end of the county. It is impossible to say with such a close score as to who had the better team. It will never be decided as this year concludes the competitive first aid tournaments, and from now on they will be standard patrol contests, as is the camporee at Bowman's Hill.

"Captain" John Sigafos, Roy Angeny, Robert Dippy, Jr., and Arthur Tyson were the team working on William Spare as the patient that took permanent possession of the Lit Brothers Store First Aid Tournament Cup, for Doylestown No. 2. "Captain John" was on the job keeping his team clicking along to do the necessary things to give first aid to their patient Spare. The doctor was sent for as is the first requisite, and from then on the patient had the best of first aid attention.

Good work was done by all the teams. "Captain" Stuart Badman of Quakertown No. 2 can take pride in the splendid showing of his team by coming through with second place. Helping Badman was a fine group of "first aiders," Kenneth Gerhart, Robert Hoffman, and Frederick Walther working on Willard Mitman as the patient. Perkasio No. 1, the 1935 Scoutcraft Champs took third place with a score of 862 points. On the team were Captain Herbert Margagal, Richard Guhick, James Moyer and William Snyder, with the patient being Charles Cassell.

The first problem was "While running across a street without looking for the traffic light, a boy was struck by an automobile. He has a cut on the top of his head, a cut on his left elbow, and his right thigh is fractured." Cornwells took first place in accuracy. Doylestown No. 2 in neatness, Doylestown and Quakertown No. 2 were tied in the care of the patient, and Doylestown was first in ability to improvise equipment.

The second problem included "While pushing a wagon down the street, it upset, and the boy was thrown for some distance. He has a fractured jaw, a cut on the right shoulder, and a cut on the left leg between the ankle and knee that is bleeding in spurts." Bristol No. 7 was first in accuracy, Bristol No. 7 and Perkasio No. 1 were tied for neatness, Perkasio No. 1 was first on the care of the patient, Bristol No. 7 was first on the improvising equipment.

The resuscitation problem requires the most careful following of a schedule routine of things to do. Twenty distinct steps must be done. The following is checked: clean patient's mouth, loosen patient's clothing, patient's arms in proper position, patient's hand under face, finger tips under shoulder, straddle subject, hands under shoulder blade, hands four inches apart, arms not bent, hands snapped off, relax muscles, respire twelve times a minute, rub limbs toward the heart, treat for shock, missing stroke while changing, patient covered, attendance of team, proper rotation, press down and forward, and stimulant after resuscitation. Doylestown and Quakertown were tied for first place out of a possible 200 points. Cornwells was second with 196 points, and Perkasio third with 186.

The gymnasium was filled during the tournament. Scout Executive William F. Livermore directed the tournament, assisted by Field Commissioner of First Aid and Safety George E. Dorfner. Judges were John Fahr, and

Three Prisoners Killed

Havana, Dec. 17.—The staccato battle of machine guns awakened the sleeping villagers of Calvario at 1.30 this morning, as three of the killers of Nicholas Castano were on their way to prison.

The three, Nello Ortega, 32, Aurelio Cuerva, 30, and Rafal Ponce, 25, a negro, were shot and killed while being returned from San Antonio De Las Vegas to Havana, according to an announcement by police.

Corporal Jacinto Izquierdo, in charge of the guards returning the prisoners, said he looked back as their car was approaching the village and noticed they were being followed by a large automobile. The pursuing automobile sped alongside of their car and opened fire on them. Corporal Jacinto, who was driving, ordered the two guards, Privates Louis Diaz and Ignacio Garcia, to return the fire.

Mrs. Elizabeth Tilford Goes To Death

By D. G. Smyth
I. N. S. Special Correspondent
(Copyright, 1935, I. N. S.)

Woodstock, Ontario, Dec. 17.—Said to have been "brave to the last," although she appeared trembling when I saw her, Mrs. Elizabeth Tilford, 50, former Salvation Army worker, died on the scaffold early today for the poison murder of her third husband, Tyrell Tilford, 36 year old teamster.

Reporters were barred at Ontario Province's first hanging of a woman in 62 years, but by climbing to the top of the armory across the street from the county jail court yard, I was able to watch the death march under the falling snow, and to hear the perceptible click of the trap as it was sprung by the executioner at 12.59 a. m. today.

Official silence cloaked the proceedings, but it was said Mrs. Tilford, mother of nine children, steadfastly maintained her ignorance to the charges of the poisoning of her husband, so that she would be free to marry another.

Although the woman remained poised throughout the trial, the rattle of the scaffold being built below her death cell Friday night, she was in a state of semi-collapse about 45 minutes before her doom.

Despite her condition she refused the customary drug offered the condemned before a hanging. When she was here she appeared to be sobbing for the children she was leaving behind.

Mrs. Tilford's body was claimed by relatives who buried her in the Baptist Cemetery. It was a funeral of 15 spectators, including the Rev. and Mrs. Dixon, four reporters, a grave digger, and the jail matron.

New Poison Pastry Cases

Philadelphia, Dec. 17.—A new out-break of poisoned pastry believed similar to that which made 147 persons ill last week, today was being investigated by Board of Health authorities. Four members of a Germantown family were reported ill after eating cream-filled pastry. The family are now under medical care. Physicians said the symptoms were similar to bacterial poison discovered in the previous outbreak.

BUY CHRISTMAS SEALS

The public again has the opportunity of contributing to the war on tuberculosis by purchasing Christmas seals.

The cause is one so obviously deserving that no argument should be needed to impress its importance upon the public mind. There are few persons unable to help in this great cause. The purchase of only one stamp is of assistance.

Encouraging headway is being made in the fight on tuberculosis. But victory has not been achieved. The advances being made, however, should encourage greater efforts in the future than have been made in the past. The war is being fought along a wide front. Various health and other agencies are engaged in the combat. It is the duty of the private citizen to do his or her part in financing the fight. Lack of adequate funds will prevent or delay eventual success.

The purchase of Christmas seals provides an easy way for assistance to be given those engaged in the actual work of pressing the fight.

ADDITION PLANNED TO LANGHORNE HIGH SCHOOL; COST $26000

Langhorne - Middletown District To Benefit Through
PWA Funds

RELIEVE CONGESTION

Limestone Ornamentation Is Also To Be Placed On Present Building

LANGHORNE, Dec. 17.—Langhorne-Middletown public school district is to have a much-needed addition to its high school structure. The wing will house six class-rooms, three on either of the two floors.

The cost involved is approximately $26,000. Of this amount the material will cost the district about $13,000, and a similar sum will be made up through PWA labor.

The new wing, measuring approximately 35x95 feet, will greatly facilitate housing of pupils, there being cared for in the present high school structure which was built in 1926, a total of 276 pupils until a short time ago. The building being crowded the two ninth grades were then accommodated in the grade school building. When the new wing is completed this group will be taken back to the high school building.

The plans also call for placing of limestone ornamentations on the present high school structure and on the addition. This work was not done when the high school was built, and with the carrying out of this project the structure will lose its plainness. The addition is to be of brick as is the present building.

The project was recently approved by the PWA officials, and the board of directors here so notified.

The heating system is not included in the proposed plan, this to be cared for later by the school board.

Schoolmen here were unable today to state the number of men to be employed, and just where they will come from, this matter being entirely up to the PWA officials.

The original plan for the high school building called for the unit system of construction, additions being made from time to time. Now the idea of a wing on either side of the present structure is planned for, the one to be built within the next few months, housing class rooms; and in years to come the second wing with an auditorium-gymnasium.

Fathers' Association To Meet Tomorrow Night

Entertainment will be furnished by the St. Ann's Athletic Club, and will feature Harry Davis, who recently defeated the Middle Atlantic States middleweight boxing champion; Vince Delia, Donato Sclarra, Tony Puccio, John Raccagno, Thomas Baynard, Nick Marchetti, "Spade" Spadacino, "Terp" Tershon, "Don" George, and Frank Brescia.

Admission will be limited to members of the Fathers' Association and to members of the St. Ann's Athletic Club. For purposes of admission, members of the Fathers' Association have been directed to present the post card notices of the meeting mailed them, or their membership cards, while members of the St. Ann's Club will present their regular membership cards.

The committee appointed at the last meeting to study the present situation and make recommendations as to ways and means whereby the Association can be of real help to the schools without necessarily incurring large financial obligations, will submit its report tomorrow evening. Advance information indicates that this report will contain valuable suggestions that can be used as the basis of a constructive program. Members are urged to be present. Refreshments will be served after the meeting.

ORIGIN OF SLANG

Talking shop is one of the most fascinating pastimes invented by man, and because shop-talk is bound to be largely slang it is the chief source of slang. Strays from the trade and class slangs are always finding their way into general circulation to become general slang, some of them descending upon the nation like a pestilence.

Prolific sources of new coinage are the theater, sports and other columns of the newspaper and magazines, but the most productive mine is the underworld. The underworld is the richest purveyor of slang for common use, the reason being that thieves' lingo possesses great vitality.

This latter circumstance is not hard to explain. It is in the logic of things that slang should have one of its principal sources in the social depths. The appeal of slang, its very reason for existence, is that it breaks away from law and usage, from the prose of measure and precision, and goes in for unrespectability and poetry. Slang is an excursion into outlawry.

High society has created little but inspired much slang. It prides itself on its correct English, which means it can take no credit for making the American branch of the language virile, expressive and picturesque. While there is little to be admired in racketeers, gangsters, cake-eaters, ladies of easy virtue and others of that ilk, they have made a distinct contribution to English as she is spoke on Broadway and Main street.

SAVING BY SPEEDING

The United States bureau of standards has figured out that the "typical" motor car will run 19 miles on a gallon of gasoline at a speed of 10 miles an hour; 18 miles at 30 miles an hour; 16 miles at 40 miles an hour, and only 15 miles at 50 miles an hour.

So we travel more slowly on our good roads and save gas. Let's see. We start out on a journey of 285 miles. If we travel at 10 miles an hour, we get 19 miles to the gallon, and we do the trip on 15 gallons. But if we travel at 50 miles an hour, we get only 15 miles to the gallon, and use 19 gallons.

So we go at 10 miles an hour and save four gallons, or about 80 cents. We also consume 28.5 hours making the trip, whereas if we travel at 50 miles an hour we take only 5.7 hours.

In 28.5 hours we buy at least three meals on the road and spend a night in a hotel. That would cost, all told, perhaps $4. In 5.7 hours we spend nothing for food. So by going at 50 miles an hour and spending 80 cents more for gas, we save $3.20.

So what?

"WIFE IN CUSTODY" by BEATRICE LUBITZ

CHAPTER XXX

Spring was a miracle of flowers and fresh green grass. The first day the massive English plant was wheeled into the sunny corner of the open porch, the first crocuses had pushed their heads through the ground and looked bravely about. Daffodils and jonquils burst into bloom and the borders of the garden were covered with the heavenly blue of forget-me-nots.

Helen spent most of the time on the sun porch from which she could see Anton working in the garden. The sun porch was a bower of flowers.

Miss Fredericks brought little Grace in for her feeding.

"The prettiest flower of the lot," she announced cheerily as she placed the baby in Helen's arms. Helen lay on the glider among the pillows. The beauty and graciousness of the green earth, whose fragrance came to her nostrils through the open windows, filled her with an ecstasy that was almost pain. The days grew cold again, of course, and the brave crocuses were pulled with hail, but Helen felt as if she had been born anew in a world whose beauties and glories she had, in her previous life, never known.

In May, Helen felt as if the earth could give forth no greater beauty. The weeping willow trees that bordered the pool were pale green and their leafy branches fell from their limbs like the draperies of tall slim dancers. The forsythia bushes were balls of solid gold. The fruit trees were heavy with blossoms and the ground beneath was snowed over with petals.

The days passed in a dream. A contentment, a fulfillment of her whole being possessed Helen. The outside world no longer existed.

Here over the meadows hung the golden sheen of early Summer. The baby slept peacefully in her pram. The white-figured form of Miss Fredericks was charming against the green. Helen was suffused with love. She hugged Miss Fredericks out of the sheer necessity for embracing a human form. Afternoons Helen squandered happily in anticipation of Walter's homecoming.

They had both decided to forget that night when he went away. They never alluded to it. It might never have happened.

Then in the middle of June, one Friday evening, Walter, without warning, brought Stella back with him. He was nervous and apologetic. Helen knew by the ruts in his forehead that he had not wanted to bring her but had been unable to say no.

"You said she might come," he whispered desperately to Helen as Stella was clanging her dress. "Poor kid, she's all broken up. She lost her baby. It's all over. She's closed her apartment and has been staying at mother's."

"Yes, I did say so, Walter," she admitted, quietly. "TL n. impulsively. 'Poor thing. She looks dreadful. I am sorry for her.'"

"You're a darling," Walter kissed her gratefully. "Yes, she's aged terribly. She's changed too, Helen. You'll find her much softer and subdued. All her old high spirit's gone. She won't be any trouble. You don't really mind, do you, Helen?"

She rumbled his thick black hair. "No, not very much. After all, it isn't her fault. She's to be pitied. I'll do all I can to make her comfortable."

For the first few days it seemed to Helen that Stella had really changed. She was so quiet—she scarcely spoke at all. Most of the time she just sat staring ahead of her.

Helen kept little Grace out of Stella's range of vision. She knew Stella must be suffering because of her frustrated motherhood and her only desire was to spare her and make her loss easier to bear, but Stella's presence in the house was like a cloud that shuts out the sun. For the life of Helen, Helen couldn't analyze the reason why, when Stella came into the room, Walter, on the sofa before the fire, his arms around Helen, would suddenly drop them and get to his feet to search for a cigarette or a match.

"Don't let me interrupt the little love scene," she would say lightly. "I just came in for a book. Honestly, Walter, I didn't know it was in you! You're a regular Don Juan!"

"Quit your kidding," Walter managed to say to himself. He even resumed his seat but now Helen sat stiffly erect. All the magic had gone out of their evening.

Or else when he came in at night and kissed Helen hungrily, Stella would suggest sardonically, "Shall I leave the room?"

Most of the time Helen tried not to let Stella see their love-making. She knew Stella's love for Jerry still consumed her. But this was difficult, for Stella was always about. And Walter too felt her presence oppressing him. She put a damper on his playfulness. Once when he caught Helen up in his arms to dance with her, Stella's acid, "Don't be a clown, Walter," sent the blood receding from his face so that even his lips were white. He tried to ignore her but it was impossible to be gay after that.

Summer melted into Fall; Autumn merged into Winter and Stella was still there.

And now the serenity of Helen's days as well as evenings had fled. Stella suddenly recovered both her equanimity and her poise. She was getting a divorce from Jerry. He had obligingly furnished her with adequate evidence so that she didn't need to bother to go to Reno.

She enjoyed her new freedom from the Salon—Miss Norma was in charge of 44th St.—although Stella made a feat of supervising by phone. During the late Summer and early Fall she swam every day, took up her horseback riding again and learned to drive so that Helen found herself obliged to ask Stella if she was using the car whenever Helen needed it. At Stella's behest Walter joined the Country Club.

"My dear," Stella exclaimed, "there are the most attractive men there. I took quite a shine to that young Jellicott chap. I hear they have loads of money, and he seems smitten with me. My dear! I've invited him for dinner tomorrow night."

"Maybe we can marry her off," Walter suggested hopefully. "After all, the poor kid has had a rotten time of it. And she's so much sweeter, don't you think?"

Helen, who had hoped when winter came that once again her home would be her own, and that Stella would go back, bag and baggage, saw now that her expectations had been in vain. Stella decided she was still too run-down to attempt to go back to town. Besides, she knew if she returned to New York she'd have to resume her work at the Salon. Instead of course, was now definitely out of 57th St. They were all a little aghast to see how beautifully the shop ran without Irene.

"I'll keep Helen company through the winter," she told Walter brightly, "and when Fredericks has her day off I can take care of the baby for Helen. Besides, I don't feel quite well enough yet, dear."

With the cessation of summer sports, however, time began to hang heavily on Stella's hands. She couldn't find the concentration to read. She was restless and unless she had a date she'd wander about, interfere with Helen's management of the house and quarrel with Miss Fredericks.

The crowning indignity came on a Friday afternoon in November. Helen had had a persistent, unpleasant toothache all morning but had not been able to get the dentist on the phone. His nurse said that Dr. Bancroft never came in on Fridays but she would try to locate him at his club and call her back. Helen chafed all morning under the nagging ache of the exposed nerve in her tooth—or such she supposed it was. To add to the strain of the situation, Stella was giving a dinner party that night for eight persons and she all but quarreled with Marie on the proper way to stud ham with cloves.

Helen, sensitive to Marie's injured feelings and, what was even worse, aware of the fact that Stella didn't know what she was talking about, had to stand by and say nothing. She knew better than to reproach Stella or to take Marie's part against Stella.

When Helen left the house Stella was haranguing the florist over the phone. He had made some slight mistake in filling Stella's order. Knowing that Helen loved red carnations and always ordered them, he had sent a dozen carnations instead of the red roses Stella had ordered.

"Order the roses, Stella, but let's keep the carnations. I'll take them up to my room," Helen suggested as she drew on her gloves.

"Certainly not! It's a matter of principle. If you're willing to let the tradespeople walk all over you,

I'm not. Why should you have the additional expense? No, he'll bring the roses and take back the carnations. That will be a lesson to him to pay proper attention to orders. The ideal!"

And she snatched these instructions into the mouthpiece.

Helen's motor was cold. She jerked the self-starter viciously. Her face was a vast ache that extended up to her head and across the back of her skull down to her neck.

"Oh, Lord," she prayed softly as she backed the car down the driveway to where it formed a semicircle that made it possible to drive out frontwards. "Take away this ache and don't let me jump down Stella's throat, because, dear God, I can't stand it any longer!"

At five o'clock, Helen drove home slowly. The pain in the tooth was gone but her head still ached. She wondered if Stella would mind if she pleaded a headache and remained upstairs. Walter wasn't coming home tonight. He always worked late on the last days of the month, staying overnight at the apartment.

Helen turned up the driveway.

It was cold and dark. The lights from the house shone warm and hospitable. She dropped into the garage. Yes, she'd plead a headache. Stella would probably be glad. It seemed to Helen (or was she really imagining now?) that Stella was even more condescending than usual when she had guests—as if she, Stella, was the mistress of the house and Helen a poor relation to whom Stella had extended her hospitality.

Marie took her coat. "How's the toothache, Mrs. Riley?"

"Better, thank you, but I have a terrible headache."

"Oh, what a shame. Take some aspirin and lie down. She gave me a headache too," she added bitterly half under her breath.

Helen pretended she didn't hear. She went slowly upstairs. Stella in a bathrobe opened her door. She was buffing her nails.

"Hello, feeling better?"

"A little, thanks. But I still have a headache. Do you mind if I don't come down to dinner, Stella?"

"Not at all, Oh, by the way, some relatives or other of yours blew in. I said you weren't home and they wouldn't wait. They acted awfully queer. I was so busy, you know, that I couldn't entertain them and Marie was in the cellar helping Fredericks use the dryer. She's so dumb she can't work it yet."

"Relatives of mine? Who?" said Helen.

"They came in a car . . . said they were just driving by. Havelheimer or Heimmyer or something. They left in a huff, I don't for the life of me know why."

"My heavens! My cousins from Brooklyn, the Havelmeyers. When did they leave? When were they here? Why didn't you make them come in? Why didn't Marie serve coffee until I got back? Oh, my Lord! And they've gone! When was it?" Helen cried in distraction.

"I told you, my dear, Marie was in the cellar. I was too busy to fuss with them and really before I turned around, they were gone!"

"Oh, this is too much! I couldn't see you call Marie? Couldn't you be nice to them? They're my dearest relatives. How could you?" Helen wailed, tears of despair rising to her eyes.

Stella shrugged. "How was I to know? I'm awfully sorry, my dear, but I tell you I was busy with my dinner."

"Your dinner! You'd think this was your house instead of mine! You're so wrapped up in yourself and your darn dinner that you couldn't even be decent and invite my cousins in. Oh, I can't stand it! I can't stand it any longer. Fredericks, Fredericks, come here at once!"

Fredericks emerged from the nursery wearing a rubber apron, splattered with cereal. Helen trembling with agitation, actually shoved her into her bedroom. She couldn't speak; she could only whisper over and over. "Oh, Fred, cricks, we've got to get out of here!"

Stella hesitated on the threshold of her own room. She was sorry now she had told Helen. She resumed her dressing, but she was nervous. Helen had really been awfully upset; she'd been downright rude if Stella wanted to be ugly about it. . . . From Helen's room and the nursery came sounds of activity.

"I wonder what she's doing," Stella thought uneasily. (To Be Continued)

COW IN THE ZOO

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 17—(INS)—For 142,000 Philadelphia children who have never seen a cow, the Zoo is erecting a model one-half acre farm right in the famous garden. A survey, declared C. I. Cohee, executive secretary of the Philadelphia Interstate Dairy Council, showed that that number of youngsters had no more idea what a cow looked like than—well, than a dodo bird. There'll be chickens, pigs, hay and everything, but the cow will be the feature attraction.

HOLLYWOOD — The telephone company's biggest customer of the month is Irving Berlin, who talks hours to the coast about the Astaire - Rogers picture, "Follow the Fleet". Every day, the composer calls one of the two stars or an executive in charge of the production. By a long distance hookup, he has listened to three of his song numbers for the film, being

When the rough-cut version of the picture is run off in a studio projection room on January 6, Berlin will fly to Hollywood to sit in on the resulting conference. Which will cost him at least one grand, in addition to his telephone tolls.

The star received dozens of offers of help, some of them from people she hardly knew. They came from Hollywood and from New York, and there were no strings attached to them. Fortunately, Loretta didn't need the money, but it touched her that so many people were ready to come to her aid in what they believed was her hour of need.

OPERATES ON SELF

CHARDON, O., Dec. 17.—Mrs. Pearl Denton, of Huntsburg, was her own surgeon when she extracted from her tonsil with a nut pick a piece of twig three-eighths of an inch long, believed to have been imbedded there since childhood when she choked on a red cedar twig while at play. At that time her father removed as he thought all of the twig. For years since she suffered pains and swellings in her tonsils. Her own operation brought instant relief.

Home Heating Hints

by JOHN BARCLAY

WHEN the heating season draws to a close, I'd like to suggest a few precautions to be taken when shutting down your heating plant.

First—be sure to leave a layer of ashes on the grates.

Next—close all the furnace doors and dampers. This will prevent the hot, damp air of the cellar from circulating through the furnace and causing the heating surfaces and smoke pipe to rust.

If your heating plant is of the steam or hot water type, I'd also suggest that you drain off all the water in the boiler. This will get rid of any sediment that may have collected in your boiler during the winter. But be sure to again fill the boiler to the normal level—do not let it stand empty during the summer. If you follow these precautions you'll not only save on repair bills but you will also prolong the life of your furnace. (23)

QUICK PASS BY WATTS WINS GAME FOR RANGERS

(By T. M. Juno)

A quick pass by Tommy Watts to "Henny" Morgan under the basket which was converted into a field goal gave the Third Ward Rangers its fourth straight victory last night in the first game played in the Italian Mutual Aid hall. It required the Rangers two extra periods to beat a stubborn Young Men's Association quintet, 32-30. The Pikers as a result are in a deadlock with the Moose for first place in the Bristol Amateur League.

Goals of all nature were made by both teams during the extra period which was wild and woolly and kept the spectators in an exciting mood. The first of the wild shots was made by Ray Dorsey who with but ten seconds remaining to be played in the last regular session, tossed the sphere from beyond the center mark from the left side of the court. It was a one-handed throw as the colored youth had picked the ball up from the floor. The ball careened off the backboard and went into the net to send the teams into action again for five more minutes.

There was no scoring in the first two minutes of the first extra period but then Bornice and Dick Brown of the Y's began a scoring bee. Bornice scored first to give the Warders a 27-25 lead but Brown retaliated by tossing two fouls through the loop to tie the score. Bornice on a pass from Watts again made a double-decker to put the Pikers into the lead. And a converted foul shot by Lawler made the score 30-27. Bornice fouled Brown and he made good on the throw, the count being 30-28. Brown on a long shot deadlocked the score and made another long one after the whistle had blown but this was erased from the book.

Scoring was scarce in the second extra quarter. Two minutes had elapsed when Watts jumped in the air to grab the ball out of a scrimmage and with a quick throw to Morgan made the play which gave the Rangers the lead, 32-30, and ultimate victory as the Radcliffe street boys were shut out the remaining minutes of the game.

The Y's did some blanking on their part as for the first twelve minutes of the game they prevented the Pikers from any score. The Warders' rooters were pleading for their boys to get started when "Jimmy" Massilla scored on a tap near the basketball. This was the signal for the Delamans to get going for Watts followed with a duel of fouls and Lake who had replaced Tulio did likewise. Kleinfelder put one in from beyond the center mark before the end of the first half to give the Y. M. A. the lead, 16-8.

Lake's field goal evened the score at the beginning of the second half and when Massilla arched on into the net, the Pikers were ahead for the first time, 12-10. Kleinfelder was fouled and converted but Lake did likewise. With the score 13-11, Brown counted on a foul and a few seconds later scored a twin-pointer to give the edge to the Y's, 14-13. Morgan again put the downtown boys in the lead by scoring from the side but Brown was the whole show and as the third quarter ended sank a field goal to give the Hendrickmen the lead, 16-15.

Another field goal by Brown increased the lead of the ultimate losers at the start of the fourth period and it looked all over when Jimmy Rue battered one in from under the basket. Kleinfelder made the count, 22-15, with a long field goal. Massilla scored a foul which was followed by a field goal by Tulio. Tulio's foul shaved the Y's lead to 22-19 but Hart made it 23-19 with a foul throw. Tulio scored two points with a field goal and followed it up by making two foul shots to deadlock the score, 23-23. Watts gave the Pikers the lead 25-23 on a pass from Lawler but Dorsey's throw tied it to send the clubs into an extra session.

Dick Brown with four field goals and four fouls was the star of the game. Brown's scoring came during the second half when he replaced Dorsey. Bud Tulio was high man for the winners with seven points.

1935's Colossus of the Links

By BURNLEY

Standing astride the world of amateur golf like a Colossus, the great Stanford Sledge Gun, Lawson Little, has established himself as the most dominating personality seen on the links since Bobby Jones put "Calamity Jane" on the shelf.

The United States Golf Association has reason to be thankful that Little came along, for the hard-hitting Coast champion has put the National Amateur back on a paying basis after a few lean years. Little is just about the best box-office attraction now swinging a golf club, as the crowds at Cleveland during the last amateur tourney proved.

Little may not be as great a golfer as Jones, mechanically speaking, but few will deny that he is at least Bobby's equal as a match player. In this man-to-man competition, the Stanford slugger seems to be without a peer today.

A natural fighter, with a flaming competitive spirit, Lawson's superb confidence makes him seem almost insolent and overbearing towards his opponent. "The man doesn't live who can beat me today," is what Little seems to be saying as he steps out to do battle with his links opponent.

The heavy-set amateur king lacks the sympathetic personality of Jones, because his almost surly pugnacity makes the gallery inevitably root for his opponent, who always seems to be the underdog when playing against this swashbuckling links warrior.

People pay to see him beaten, as they did in the cases of those warriors of the roped arena, Jack Sharkey, Berlenbach and Leach Cross. However, Little always seems to disappoint his ill-wishers, as his illustrious competitive record shows.

MAY INTRODUCE ROWING AT PITTSBURGH

By Vic Jacobs
I. N. S. Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 17—(INS)—Collegiate rowing regattas, a sport hitherto confined to famed schools bordering on large rivers in the East and West, may soon be introduced to Pittsburgh.

John J. Kane, commissioner-elect of Allegheny County and architect Henry Hornbostel, slated to become the new county parks director, have made known intentions to promote rowing as part of a drive to clean up the city's three rivers—Allegheny, Monongahela and Ohio—to develop them for sport and recreational uses.

Several athletic officials have expressed doubt that rowing would lure many of the district colleges because of the high cost of organizing and maintaining a crew and equipment.

They estimate it would cost between $25,000 and $50,000 to launch competitive river races and are more or less skeptical that the few meets a rowing season provides would give them a justified return in the way of attendance and "admissions" with which to finance subsequent races.

Financing the inaugural, which boosters hope to see run off next spring, is one of the principal reasons why athletic directors of local schools are said to be balking at the suggestion but the incoming Democratic administration has intimated it will be willing to foot some of the bills as a social service, similar to maintenance of county parks.

"I'm going to make a real fight to bring collegiate rowing to Allegheny County rivers," Kane said. "We'll see if we can't persuade Pitt, Tech and Duquesne to put crews on the rivers."

ODD FELLOWS SCORE WIN OVER HIBERNIANS

Marty Fallon's Hibernians pressed hard on the Odd Fellows for three quarters of the second game of the night on the Italian Mutual Aid floor but lost their stamina in the last four minutes of the game to drop the decision with the final tabulations being: Odd Fellows, 46; Hibernians, 39.

Several times the Big Green came from behind to trail the Oddies by a few points but never could wrest the lead from Herman's proteges. The Oddies played good basketball at times and then again failed on other occasions. At one time by fast passing and sharp-eyed shooting they managed to roll up a ten point lead on the Irish but slowly the Fallon-men began to creep up and by the end of the third quarter had shaved the lead to four points.

It was field goals by Danny Hines and Bobby Weideman which gave the Odd Fellows the victory. Hines scored four field goals in the second half of the tilt with Weideman counting twice from the field. The other players could not find the net from the floor although three foul points were made. Hines and Weideman scored the double-deckers which gave the Black and White the victory in the final stages of the game.

"Unkie" Gallagher and "Eddie" Roe shared the scoring laurels for the losers. Gallagher had thirteen points, one more than Roe. The Oddies fouled twice during the entire game. Gallagher converted once and Fallon missed his chance. Lack of substitutes was a great hindrance to the Big Green.

Thursday night, St. Ann's play the Odd Fellows, and the Hibernians meet the Moose.

KIDNAPPED HIS WIFE

PANCHAREVO, Bulgaria, Dec. 17—(INS)—Keeping one's divorced wife under lock and key in a basement room for a year is the unique record established by a local man after she left him. He made many attempts at winning her back to him, but without avail. So one evening as she was leaving her house, he grabbed her and dragged her to his home. No one saw or heard and he kept her under lock for over a year. She would have remained under captivity longer had not a municipal assessor's committee come to inspect every part of the house and premises. In Court the abductor pleaded that he had resorted to violence because he loved his wife and could not live without her. The Court sentenced him to a year of imprisonment.
